6. In a compilation of pro forma financial information, the accountant must determine whether the accountant is independent of the entity. (Ref: par. A5)	A5. The interpretations of the “Independence Rule” (ET sec. 1.200.001) of the AICPA Code of Professional Conduct provide authoritative guidance with respect to independence. It is in the public interest and, therefore, required by this section, that the accountant modify the accountant’s compilation report when the accountant is not independent of the entity whose pro forma financial information is the subject of the compilation engagement. The AICPA Code of Professional Conduct also defines independence as consisting of two elements, independence of mind and independence in appearance. Independence enhances the accountant’s ability to act with integrity and be objective. Independence implies an impartiality that recognizes an obligation to be fair not only to the responsible party but also to users of the pro forma financial information, who may rely upon the accountant’s compilation report. In the absence of an interpretation of the “Independence Rule” that addresses a particular relationship or circumstance, a member should apply the “Conceptual Framework for Independence” interpretation (ET sec. 1.210.010).
